These tables compare visit frequency patterns across retail and residential locations by daypart, revealing clear behavioral differences. In retail settings, most visits occur infrequently (0–2 times per week), particularly for breakfast (81%) and late night (74%), with more moderate engagement at lunch and dinner. A meaningful share of customers visit retail locations 3–5 times weekly, especially for lunch (35%) and dinner (29%), suggesting these are routine usage patterns. High-frequency visits (6–7 times) remain relatively low across all retail dayparts.

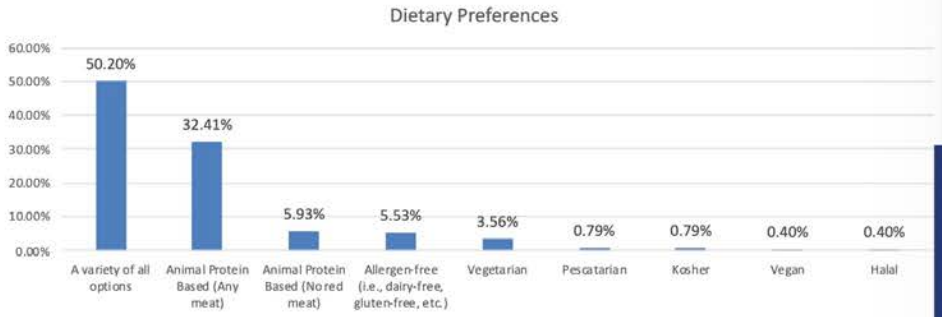

In contrast, residential locations show lower usage for late-night dining (79%) and especially for food to-go (92%), indicating these are less frequent needs. However, lunch and dinner display more balanced distributions, with higher proportions of frequent users (26% and 30%, respectively), signaling habitual use. Breakfast also sees more consistent engagement compared to retail. Overall, residential environments demonstrate stronger repeat behavior at core meal times, while retail usage is more occasional and varied by daypart.
